King Edward's is a traditional boarding school in the south of England, one hour's drive from London. The school is located in the village of Witley, a quiet countryside village near Guildford.

Originally founded in 1553 by King Edward VI, the school moved to its present location in 1867.

Did you know?

During World War 2, the school was taken over by the British Royal Navy to test and develop radar technology.

Today, King Edward's School remembers the top secret research with a plaque in the lobby outside the dance studio.

Available courses:

- Bucksmore English
- English Plus Coding
